

I am absolutely horrified that the Commission would consider loosening the ownership restrictions on tv or other media after witnessing, if they are paying any attention at all, to the debacle that media gluttons like Clear Channel have caused in the entertainment industry. That consolidation has become nothing less than criminal, and has absolutely torn the music, radio, and live entertainment fields apart, and Clear Channel has been hypocritical, disingenuous, and arrogant every step of their feeding frenzy.

There are cases being reviewed now with all the facts; I don't see how the Commission could consider allowing the same nightmare to engulf other medias without following through first in inspecting the full damage the same rules, or free-for-all lack of restraint, have done to radio.

The mega-media conglomerates such as Viacom and Clear Channel have clearly proven themselves to be cunning, cutthroat, vicious, duplicitous "competitors", a bigger threat than the old AT&T monopoly ever could be, and need to be stopped. The commission certainly shouldn't be allowing the same fate to befall television without the proper research. Deregulation might sound good on paper for competition, but the likes of Clear Channel proves that some wolves need to be shot before they wipe out the entire forest.
